The meaning can vary significantly depending on the personal beliefs and religious beliefs of people who take part in the practice.

To be able to take part in soul healing, often people will join in workshops, one-on-one lessons or by taking a spiritual retreat. Lots of spiritual retreats are located in exotic locales like for instance deserts or by the sea where participants could actively interact with the natural surroundings. These exotic places are selected in view of the fact that they are fairly isolated from mainstream tourism, not to mention steeped with natures' pristine beauty. This quiet surrounding provides the soul healing guides as well as the participating individuals' simplicity which is believed to be ideal for personal reflection.

These soul healing spiritual retreats usually concentrate on a voyage toward spiritual renewal. They are designed to surround the participant with positive energy and encourage the soul to reconnect with humanity. Peace and relaxation are usually vital parts of several soul healing packages. The practitioners may encourage and emphasize that through physical relaxation the individual taking part will be able to immediately go into a condition where they are more receptive and responsive to healing.

Hiking and guided nature tours are somewhat common activities on soul healing retreats for the reason that the natural world tends to have a calming effect on individuals. Cultural explorations of neighbouring groups may help in order to encourage a bond along with the natural world. It is believed that the exploration of natural surroundings is capable of engaging the individual to change their focus, allowing them to let go of past worries and anxieties. Some people feel that this gives the spirit free rein to participate in the voyage. Some followers allege that by bonding along with the natural world the mind becomes more open to the concept of exploring the higher self.

Spiritual healing spas help to keep the focus on healing the soul. These spas would often offer chanting, fire massages, cleansing practices, vision quests and other rituals that help to cleanse the body. Numerous soul healing workshops have spiritual guides so as to help lead the participants as they try to open up to self-realization. These guides could be called shamans or intuitive healers, depending on the type of retreat that is being visited. Also depending on the retreat, the reason of the guide could vary; some could make use of rituals to try to recover fragmented parts of the soul to be able to offer healing and self-love. Other guides may attempt to discover the spiritual causes of an ailment, for example false beliefs concerning negative attitudes or the self.
